M.Video President Alexander Tynkovan commented:

"Despite a challenging start to the year amid a decline in consumer activity in the first quarter of 2017, M.Video was able not only to increase sales for the full year, but also to show considerable improvement across all financial performance metrics, which speaks to the strength of our balanced effective business model and high level of corporate governance. M.Video has successfully managed to implement OMNI-channel retail, offered customers a seamless online and offline experience, and this is reflected in the Company's results for the period, namely a stronger overall market position, increased like-for-like sales and rapid growth in the online segment. By enhancing its IT-systems and introducing innovations in all areas, from procurement to HR, M.Video is undergoing a transformation into a digital business, which, even on a saturated market, allows the company to better anticipate customer expectations and deliver growth of equity investments".

M.Video Chief Executive Officer Enrique Fernandez added:

"M.Video's market share in the Russian online consumer electronics segment has nearly caught up with our overall market share position, reaching 16.6% in the fourth quarter of 2017. We are successfully competing with internet players using our retail network as a competitive advantage. In the online segment, M.Video has managed to outpace the market in all categories thanks to our efficient OMNI-channel strategy.

"Our technical solutions and the new ecosystem approach to sales that we have implemented over the past two years has enabled M.Video to actively build out its presence in the digital appliances segment, attracting a new and younger clientele, while at the same time preserving M'Video's profitability. The M.Credit consumer lending program and Real Time Dealing project for stores we launched only a year ago are already having a positive effect on our revenue, and I am confident that they will become one of the key competitive advantages in the fight for new customers".
